THE ACES ON BRIDGE

"If you see a good move, look for a better one." — chess maxim

Many declare itself a good chance for their contract and look no further, but you would not like that trap, would you? Let us look at today's deal with West on the lead. West has the fourth highest club in his partner's hand.

If clubs were 6-2, there might be benefit in holding up the club king, breaking the defenders' communication. However, if it is clear from West's fourth best of the four that he can run no more than five clubs (since you can see the club three in dummy), the best idea is to win the first club and then attempt to set up nice tricks while allowing East the least possible chance of gaining the lead. Do you see how to do this? You should cross to the spade ace, then run the diamond jack. You will go down only when two cards are badly placed — the diamond king with West and the spade king with East. The alternative line of taking an immediate spade finesse will down the contract only when one card, the spade king, is wrong.

The "safe" play could be used if your club holding was slightly different, such as K-Q. However, if your club were A-x-x, you would play the spade hand differently. You would hold up the ace twice, hoping clubs were 5-3. You would then finesse spades into the ace hand, with the diamond finesse in reserve.

ANSWER: You should double, then hold no trump at the cheapest level over partner's response. This shows 10 or so and a balanced hand and lets partner decide whether to look for game and what strain to play. Do not jump to game just because you have 20 points; partner might well have none at all.
